INSURANCE COMPANY IN-
GENUOUSLY DECEASED.

A clever fraud was recently worked off on the Manufacturers' Life Insurance Co., of Canada, at Nara, Japan, which led them to pay out Yen 8,000 on a policy. One Saito was the man who was insured, and died. Some weeks preceding March last Saito went to a Nara physician for treatment, when he was found to be suffering from cancer in the stomach. It seems that an assistant of the doctor was the real originator of the scheme. Knowing that Saito had cancer in the stomach and that the doctor had only given him a few months to live, the assistant, Kubo Akina, suggested to the insurance agent Matsuda a way of making money. Saito was approached, and agreed to be insured on condition that yen 200 should be given to his wife at the time of his decease. The insurance was effected after the examination of Saito by the Osaka doctor, but it appears that cancer in the stomach is very difficult to detect, unless some hint is given of unfavourable symptoms. As is now known, Saito really expired a few months afterwards, breathing his last at a large house specially hired. This house was one of the best in the neighbourhood, and yen 15 rent was paid for one or two days' use. It was obtained of course in order to deceive the insurance company's agent from Osaka, who, when he arrived, was received by the widow of Saito, well dressed for the occasion. The widow received the Yen 200 as promised, but none of the scheme's enjoyed their success for long, as in a few days all were arrested. The accomplices in the fraud were Matsuda, the head of the district agent, who received Yen 1,700; Kajikawa Yonosuke, an assistant agent, who received Yen 400; Inouye Torakichi, a wealthy accessory, whose share was Yen 1,000; Yoshikawa Rikhei, who obtained Yen 1,700; and Kubo Akina, the doctor's assistant, who received Yen 1,350. The insurance company has only recovered a portion of the money paid out. A policeman who noticed that the house was only let for a few days became suspicious and searched the plot.

Mountaineering Fatality at Scafell.
Scarcely a summer passes that we do not have to deplore the loss of several lives on some foully-ruined mountain range, but the calamity which has just occurred among our new Cumberland hills creates a record in British mountaineering catastrophes, writes our London correspondent. Four tourists, roped together, and well versed in climbing, essayed to scale Scafell. As far as can be judged, they had only ascended about 400 feet when they were dashed to the base; three of them being instantaneously killed, while the fourth, though horribly mangled, was still breathing when found by another party of holiday-makers, with whom the unfortunate victims had lunched earlier in the day. It is surmised that the leader becoming tired attempted to change places with the man behind him, or else the strong wind which sometimes tears through the gaps in the hills flung the men from their perilous position. For those content to keep to the beaten paths, Scafell presents no difficulty, but there are parts of its rugged surface which are almost sheer, appearing to the novice impossible of negotiation and offering obstacles not to be beaten on any Alpine or Himalayan heights. Indeed this particular spot was not conquered until 1898, and it was close by that Professor Marshall was killed in the same sad way. These peaks command a view of some of the grandest but most desolate country in Great Britain, and members of the Alpine Club are generally to be found here enjoying the pastime in which they are much adepts, but one cannot help wondering how much longer men will risk their life on pleasure when they would regard it as undertaken for duty, as a most horrifying ordeal.
